Piece of Anson County Cabin from 'Evil Dead II' Movie was for Sale on eBay

Much of the filming of the Evil Dead II movie took place in Anson County in 1986, and the film was released in the United States on March 13, 1987. This movie was a sequel to the highly successful original film, both directed by Sam Raimi. With filming of The Color Purple having taken place here in 1985, Anson County was beginning to feel like Hollywood east!

An article online has offered some information about artifacts from Evil Dead II. It reads: Last year Evil Dead super-fan Mike Pasquale began restoring both the cabin and workshop from Evil Dead II, with plans to bring the iconic locales on tour at various horror conventions across the country. To make a long story short, the structures recently collapsed, and the owners allowed Pasquale to haul them off and do with them as he pleased.

As promised, the restored structures did indeed pop up at a few conventions last year, and it looks like Pasquale is now parting with them. Over on eBay, he's just put up an auction for the left side upper living room wall from the Evil Dead 2 cabin, taken from its original Wadesboro, NC resting place in April 2016.

"This is the actual exterior wall from the front upper left side of the original Evil Dead II Cabin," Pasquale notes in the eBay listing. "In relation to the movie, this piece would have been above the clock and cellar door. The wall is fully intact. It is approximately 16 feet long and pretty heavy. Shipping can be done via U SHIP services at the expense of the buyer or can be picked up by the buyer in Weirton, WV."

He adds, "I no longer have the room for this piece or a large enough area to use it as a display piece. I do not want to cut it up or dismantle it in any way. It survived the collapse of the cabin and would hate to cause any damage to it."

As of July 5 the auction was at $1,499. More information about the restoration is available at EvilDeadWorkshed.com.
