Remembering.....

Brown Creek Soil & Water Conservation District "The Nation's First 1937 - 2012"

Early in our nation's history was the first Conservation List...right here in Anson County, The Brown Creek and Water Conservation District. This was in 1937, begun by Anson County native, Dr. Hugh Hammond Bennett. Dr. Bennett is known worldwide as the "Father of Soil Conservation."

During the early years the progress was very slow, but finally some of the things involved with conservation got on course. Among other things, water was routed and following the course as directed which improved many areas here in Anson County.

Workshop on Water Quality Cost-share Opportunities

As North Carolina's land use becomes more urban, the need for stormwater and water quality protection increases. Thanks to a new state program, funds are available for approved stormwater practices such as backyard rain gardens, backyard wetlands, water harvesting cisterns, streambank protection, and critical area planting. These practices help slow and filter stormwater, conserve water use, and prevent soil erosion.

Anson County households, schools, businesses, local government, churches, communities, parks, essentially all publically and privately owned lands, are eligible. The state funded program, called Community Conservation Assistance Program (CCAP), addresses stormwater pollution, flooding, soil erosion and poor drainage issues to help protect property, beautify, and provide essential wildlife habitat. CCAP is administered through the Brown Creek Soil and Water Conservation District in Wadesboro. Fiscal year 2012 funds are limited so please apply early.

Anyone interested in learning more about CCAP is invited to attend an informational session, Thursday, October 4 at 6 p.m. at the Anson Cooperative Extension Service. There we will cover eligibility, application process, and approved practices. To register for this informational session contact Aimee Rankin at the Anson Cooperative Extension Service, 704-694-2415.
